Harley Morman: Let's Do the Time Warp Again

October 9, 2021-January 30, 2022

Harley Morman's Let's Do the Time Warp Again uses lenticular images to consider time and repetition. You may be familiar with these retro 'animations' in which two related images are combined and seem to come alive when you change perspective or position. Lenticulars were used on toys, bookmarks, and might have been found on any number of things in a Scholastic book fair. By using Lenticulars in his artworks, Morman presents images that transform as you move around the exhibition space and to show how a change in perspective can completely alter what and how you see.

Lenticular film is Time Warp's central material metaphor. Morman approaches it as a low craft material and embraces the ghostly glitches, stutters, and transitions of this striated 'novelty' medium. The artist uses nostalgic and campy middle school imagery to move between an institutional past and idealized present to challenge viewers to hold multiple angles simultaneously while also challenging concepts of time. Let's do the time warp again!

George Littlechild: Here I am – Can you see Me?

November 6, 2021-March 14, 2022

Edmonton-born artist George Littlechild describes his work as “art that speaks from the heart, the social and the political.” Littlechild is committed to righting the wrongs that First Nations peoples have endured by creating work that focuses on cultural, social and political injustices. As an artist, educator, cultural worker, and a child who grew up during the ‘60s-scoop in Edmonton, Littlechild’s goal is a better world. Featuring a series of portraits of residential schoolchildren created by Littlechild, this exhibition will show the pride, strength and beauty of First Nations people and cultures with the artist’s goal to contribute to the betterment of mankind.
